

Houses of Brick Do The Trick

Porkopolis, USA - August 29, 2010 - Everywhere you look, there they are: how-to magazines and fix-it shows, all giving the latest and greatest advice on the best materials to use when repairing or remodeling your home, or building a new home. They are all interesting and very popular, too. They can get a bit overwhelming, especially when the advice gets contradictory. Where do you go? Whose advice is the most reliable? The best authorities are ones who can speak from their own experience, sharing the mistakes they've made along the way, and helping you avoid doing the same.

The Three Little Pigs are brothers who've had their share of interesting experiences in construction. All of them have always thought of themselves as being very knowledgeable about fixing and building things. They also have very strong opinions. The first home each of them built was a prime example of this. The youngest brother built his house of straw, the middle brother built his house of sticks, and the oldest built his house of bricks. Each brother thought his house could stand the test, that of them all, his was the best, until the day a wolf came along. The wolf tried to get to each of the brothers by blowing down their houses. The wolf could blow down the house of straw and the house of sticks. The two younger brothers escaped to their big brother's house. Try as he might, the wolf just couldn't blow down the brick house, so he gave up and left.

All three brothers learned a lesson that day. There may be a lot of houses out there, made of straw and sticks, that are beautiful and seem durable. They've learned that the ones that stand the test of time are houses of brick. They'd like to share their experience and expertise with you. The brothers have started a construction company, We Pick Brick Construction
